Note: A biography along with the fully completed application form must be submitted to be considered for this role.

Amanda has worked in health and social care improvement and regulation for 20 years before retiring from the Care Quality Commission in March 2024. Her career has included producing national reviews and reports focussing on the care of people with long term conditions and older people, work to set up Healthwatch England and the Healthwatch network and introducing ratings for health and social care services, including Primary Care.

A long-term resident of Hertfordshire, she is strongly committed to improving care and ensuring that health and care organisations understand and listen to the views of people using services and are organising care in ways that are accessible and meet their diverse needs.
